

Living Iron

Like 'jewellery for your home', Living Iron's ornamental and architectural ironwork adds ambience and personality

There's an art to taking one of the earth's most common elements, iron, and creating something that is not only beautiful, but also personal. This is exactly what Living Iron founder Craig Parton does every day.

Think lilies, dragonflies and swirls that mimic the movement of the ocean - Craig and his team of artisans can immortalise the most beautiful living things into wrought iron fences, gates, balustrades, water features, lights, furniture and sculptures.

A blacksmith since 1985, Craig established Living Iron in 1998. His extensive experience, coupled with the knowledge and skill of a team of 17, ensures all projects are carried out with exceptional attention to detail.

Each piece is custom designed according to the client's specific requirements - Craig and his team work closely with them to ensure the ironwork enhances their property.

Decorative components are hand forged, all welds are ground and, where possible, TIG welding is used to ensure a neat finish.

Finishes are selected to coordinate with exterior colour schemes and a wide range of colours and textures is available.

As well as creating stunning pieces for residential clients, Living Iron also has extensive experience in the commercial industry. Projects include the orangutan enclosure at Perth Zoo, gates at Steves Fine Wine & Food and steel work at Mount Hawthorn Primary School.

Exceptional attention to detail goes into each and every one of Living Iron's designs.
